DAIRYMEN MUST PROGRESS TO SURVIVE

Progress is the price of survial in the dairy business today, says W. S. Griffith, dairy specialist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Competition is getting tougher, and good production today will be considered only fair production tomorrow, and finally will fall into the "poor" classification.

Griffith says there was a time when production was a desirable program for the best dairymen. Records were thought of as nice, but necessary. Dairymen could make more money simply by working harder. These things are not true today.

Now a dairymen finds it impossible to feed his cows at the most profitable level without modern machine-processed dairy herd improvement association or owner-sampler records. He needs records to show which heifers should be kept, which should be sold. He needs records in culling breeding, identification.

Week of Prayer for our Youth will be observed in our schools and churches beginning March 18-25.

Mrs. Robert Fore, of, Pamplin, press secretary for the S.D.A. church of Appomattox says she believes that prayer changes things. In a letter received recently from her daughter, Mrs. Vc C. Brown (Helen), of Cicero, Inn. relates an experience she had on the highway during a blizzard and snow storm, March 4. About 200 cars were stranded. "Isackily for me, I didn't get stuck," Helen says. When informed by police at Westfiled, 12 miles from their home, all would have to remain there that night, to park their cars and go to the school house, just then a friendly lady came along and invited her to stay at her house. She remained there until 12:30 next day. By 1:30 she was safe at home again. She, too, believes in prayer and says, "I give to God all the credit for getting through without mishap." Mrs. Brown and her husband spent two terms in West Africa as missionaries.

PINE SAWFLY DAMAGE EXPECTED TO DIMINISH

The Virginia pine sawfly, which has been epidemic throughout much of eastern Virginia since 1958, is expected to be less active this Spring.

A survey recently completed by the Virginia Division of Forestry is the basis for predicting a noticeable drop in sawfly damage over the Piedmont section of the Commonwealth. The predictions are based on extensive sampling for overwinter- ing eggs of the sawfly laid in pine foliage last November. Ten hundred-forty selected pine stands in eleven counties. For fast sampling a shotgun was utilited to bring down sample branches. A 650-mile road survey outside the infestation and predict its future course.

Although damage by the sawfly is expected to drop in the Piedmont considerable defoliation (over 50% of the foliage removed) will be evident in the counties of King & Queen, King William, Essex and Richmond. It will probably also be quite evident in portions of counties lying to the east and south of those just mentioned. It is in this general area that the sawfly caused extensive defoliation for the first time last spring.

Elsewhere in the State defoliation will be considerably lighter, but still noticable (20%-50% of the foliage removed) in eastern Mecklenburg and western Brunswick and Dinwiddie; southern Cumberland; southeastern Buckingham and Louisa and parts of Amelia, Nottoway, Lunenburg, Goochland, Powhatan, Hanover, Chesterfield and Henrico.

Through the remaining areas of the State where the sawfly has been active previously it is expected to cause only light to negligible defoliation.

The sawfly continues to show preference for the native Virginia and shortleaf pine, but occasionally will cause noticeable defoliation of loblolly pine in local areas.

During the survey this year, several sampling methods were compared.

To date there has been no confirmed report of pines being killed as the result of defoliation by the pine sawfly. Reduction in wood growth appears to be the major loss to date.

The Virginia pine sawfly is expected to hatch during the last week in March in central Virginia. Larval feeding covers a period of 5-6 weeks.
